Vineland Offers New Services

Jennifer Polanz

Growers and suppliers now have a new option for their integrated biological strategies in keeping plants as healthy as possible during the growing process: Vineland Research & Innovation Centre in Canada has come out with new services to support the industry.

Those services include discovery and development of new bioprotectants, both macrobial and biochemical; evaluation of a variety of bio-products; and process analysis for growers to recommend optimal biological plant protection tools.

The benefits of their services include vendor neutrality, pre-commercial greenhouse and laboratory facilities, and established connections along the value chain, according to an announcement from Vineland about the services. And these services are available anywhere, including in the U.S., as well as Canada.
